READER, COME HOME
The Reading Brain in a Digital World
MARYANNE WOLF

LETTER 1
LETTER 2
LETTER 3
Learning to read changes the brain by repurposing primitive auditory, visual, and oral circuits to construct a reading brain and make it possible for children to learn through reading.

Proficient reading changes the brain through interactions with character relationships and interactions as areas related to empathy, personal reflection, critical thinking, imagination and language are activated.

Construction of the Reading Brain in a Digital Culture

- Dr. Wolf asks... "Will immersion in digital experiences from social media to games, impede the formation of slower cognitive processes such as critical thinking, personal reflection, imagination, and empathy? Will distractions of children’s attention and immediate access to information create less incentive for young readers to build knowledge?"
Takeaways

- Our brains are not wired to read. There is no ideal reading circuit.
- Oral language is a basic human function, reading is not.
- "Plasticity within limits" means we are using old parts of the brain for new purposes. The brain is able to go "beyond" its original, biologically-endowed functions and develop totally unknown capacities. Neuronal groups that are to be repurposed share similar functions with the new one.
- We are talking about a process that takes 400ms to complete

Thus, to select some examples of greatness, we have no idea whether Johann Sebastian Bach or Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart actually lived in a cheerful or a despondent manner. Mozart moves us with the peculiarly touching and endearing grace of early blossoming and fading; Bach stands for the edifying and comforting submission to God’s paternal plan of which suffering and dying form a part. But we do not really read these qualities from their biographies and from such facts about their private lives as have come down to us; we read them solely from their works, from their music.

If you are reading this passage during the Letter 4 session, at the Atlanta Speech School, please stop reading, stand up, and put your right hand on your ear.

Furthermore, although we know Bach’s biography and deduce his personality from his music, we involuntarily include his posthumous destiny in the picture. We conceive him as living with the knowledge, which causes him a silent smile, that all his work would be forgotten after his death, that his manuscripts would be treated as so much waste paper, that one of his sons instead of himself would be considered “the Bach,” and harvest the success he himself merited, and that after his
DIGITAL CHAIN HYPOTHESIS

“Over the last ten years we have changed in how much we read, how we read, what we read, and why we read with a digital chain that connects the links among them all and extracts a tax we have only begun to tally.”

“WHAT WILL HAPPEN...IF THE ‘LANGUAGE OF BOOKS’ NO LONGER FITS THE CULTURE’S STYLE - FAST, HEAVILY VISUAL, AND ARTIFICIALLY TRUNCATED?”

~DR. AURELIO MARIA MOTTOLA AS PARAPHRASED BY DR. MARYANNE WOLF
"If our perception of beauty becomes reduced to skimming like a water strider across the thin surface of words, we will miss the depths below; we will never be led by beauty to learn and understand what lies beneath."

~Dr. Maryanne Wolf
"The future of language is linked both to the sustained efforts by writers to find those words that direct us to their hard-won thought and to the sustained efforts by readers to reciprocate by applying their best thought to what is read."
